

Andropause, the "male menopause," is a physiological fact. Its onset is later than women's menopause, and you can blame it for everything from irritability, to lethargy, low self-esteem, and reduced libido.

"I see it all the time," assures Dr. Kathy Maupin, "usually among the husbands of my female patients. The guys can't keep up with their wives after the women have had successful treatment for their own menopausal symptoms."

Dr. Maupin explains that during andropause a man's testosterone level can drop markedly, lowering his sex drive, reducing his stamina, shrinking his muscle mass, and affecting both attention span and memory. "The big problem," she says, "is that men feel they're just getting old... that there's nothing that can be done about it. Consequently, they don't look for help. It's usually their wives who recognize what is happening, and who ask me to do for their husbands what I did for them."

Hormone Therapy...for your husband?

Purity packs a punch

The treatment Dr. Maupin offers to her male patients is testosterone replacement therapy, delivered in pellets placed in the fatty area of the hip or midsection.

"All too often in medicine, we treat symptoms," says Dr. Maupin.

Testosterone pellet therapy treats the cause of the symptoms by replacing what is missing in a man's chemistry, restoring and rejuvenating him. The pellets are a more efficient, more effective way to restore testosterone levels, and because they are placed every four to six months, they are more convenient than patches, creams, injections, or pills."

To reduce the risk of enlarged prostate, Dr. Maupin monitors her patients after the pellets are implanted to be sure the testosterone does not metabolize to dihydrotestosterone (DHT) too quickly.

Patients speak up...

"Bill and I have been seeing Dr. Maupin for about a year and a half," says Sandra*, 53. "I feel younger, there's less friction in my relationships with others, my memory is sharp as a tack, and my husband looks hot to me again!"

"Pellet therapy has made a big difference in my life," agrees 55-year-old Bill*.

"I used to have a hard time getting enough sleep, I had body aches, and I could tell I wasn't too clear-headed. Now, I can put in a full day of work, get seven hours of sleep a night, and not hurt when I wake up in the morning. I feel revitalized. And it's nice to feel like a 20-year-old in bed!" My overall health is better, I dropped my excess weight, my mental clarity is better, and even my golf game improved. It's been amazing."

And his libido?

"I'll tell you something," says Dick. "If you want a decent sex life when you're over 70, you've got to consider these pellets."

"I'm 76 years old, and Dr. Maupin's testosterone pellets almost have me believing in the Fountain of Youth."
